Homecoming 2007

(Updated Thursday, October 11, 2007, 4:37 PM)

Yosemite High School Principal Steve Raupp said he's been to every homecoming rally except the first one, and Friday's was the best ever.

Students awash in blue and badger tracks filled the gym for some lunchtime hooting, hollering and high jinx.

The walls reverberated with the sounds of drums and loud cheers.

Student Activities Director Tammy Thacker and friends were surprise guests as the senior-senior cheer squad made up of teachers and administrators. The squad had the students gaping in amazement and laughing themselves silly.

Zack Stone was named homecoming king at the end of the rally. The queen, Cory Rowledge, was crowned at the game. All-week long, classes had competed for spirit points for such things as the way they dressed, how many Badger T-shirts they bought and which class yelled the loudest (and kept quiet when it was appropriate). The seniors won, with 1,625 points.

It was homecoming at Yosemite High School Friday night for the Badgers game against Washington Union. During halftime, Queen Cory Rowledge was introduced to the crowd with King Zachary Stone, who was crowned earlier in the day.
